Job Market Paper

“The Superstar Effect: Evidence from Chess”, with Alexander Matros

Abstract. “Superstars” exist in many places – in classrooms, or in workplaces, there is a small number of people who show extraordinary talent and ability. The impact they have on their peers, however, is an ongoing research topic. In competition, they might intimidate others; causing their peers to show less effort. On the contrary, superstars might encourage higher effort, as their existence in a competition could push all competitors to “step up” their game. In this study, we analyze the impact of a superstar on their peers using move-level evidence from chess. The existence of a contemporary superstar (and the current World Chess Champion) Magnus Carlsen, as well as, past world champions such as Garry Kasparov, Anatoly Karpov, or Bobby Fischer enables us to identify whether the existence of a superstar in a chess tournament has a positive or an adverse effect on other chess players’ performance, i.e., on the mistakes committed. The results indicate that the effect depends on the intensity of the superstar. If the skill gap between the superstar and the rest of the competitors is large enough, an adverse effect exists. However, when the skill gap is small, there may be slight positive peer effects. In terms of head-to-head competition, the evidence shows that superstars outperform their opponents in all specifications due to their higher ability. Understanding the effect of superstars on peer performance is crucial for firms and managers considering to introduce a superstar associate for their team.
